HURRICANE KATRINA

On 29th August 2005 Hurricane Katrina hit the city. Many people lost their lives. Hurricane Katrina was a combination of a tropical storm and high seas. It started on 23rd August, but within days it had grown bigger and stronger. By the day the storm reached New Orleans, the wind speed was 175 miles per hour, which made it the second strongest hurricane ever in the Gulf of Mexico. When Katrina hit New Orleans, the rain, the rising water and the high winds caused a huge flood in many areas of the city. Streets, houses, shops and cars were under water. The flood lasted for many days after the storm passed and lots of people had to wait for help on their roofs. The days that followed Katrina were very difficult. There was no food and no drinking water and there was nowhere safe to go. Many houses were destroyed in the storm and the flood that followed, and rescue workers could not get into the city because the roads were destroyed, too. The city has now been built again, but the lives of its people have changed forever.

storm = bouře; flood = povodeň; last = trvat*
